Roy Hill selects Aspen Medical to deliver Operational Healthcare Services in the Pilbara

Aspen Medical has been contracted by Roy Hill Iron Ore Pty Ltd to provide integrated healthcare services to the Roy Hill Project. This project encompasses an iron ore mine, 344km of heavy rail and a port facility at Port Hedland. The deposit is located north of Newman, at the eastern end of the Chichester Range in the Pilbara region of Western Australia.

This contract builds on Aspen's reputation for providing the resource sector with tailored healthcare solutions in remote and challenging environments. "Our commitment is to draw on our operational experience to provide the highest quality healthcare, using the best in logistics, technology and medical expertise to support personnel and increase efficiency" said Matt Hughes, Director of Operations at Aspen Medical.

Aspen Medical will provide a complete range of medical and environmental health services to support operations to all Roy Hill sites. These services include 24/7 medical evacuation services, primary health care support, 24/7 e-medicine consultation, medical logistics and equipment support, pre-employment and medical assessments, drug testing and the provision of medical consumables and equipment.

This project demonstrates Aspen's flexibility in crafting the most appropriate medical solutions to suit the requirements of customers. Aspen Medical Director Dr James Ross added "We are focused on ensuring our client has assurance of the provision of highly refined medical processes and procedures, which are innovative and flexible in delivery".
